Do You Work For One of the Region's Best Workplaces?

It's hard to believe, but the average Denver area commuter spends almost three full days — or 67 hours! — sitting in traffic each year. That translates into more than 100 gallons of wasted fuel for each commuter. In Denver alone, more than 30 top-notch employers are turning things around by offering outstanding commuter benefits to their employees. You too can join these industry leaders by becoming one of Colorado's Best Workplaces for CommutersSM.

Working in partnership with the Colorado Human Resources Association (CHRA), the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is challenging employers in the Denver region to step up and see if they qualify for this exclusive list.

"When it comes to commuter benefits, the Denver region stands apart," said Jeffra Rockwell of EPA's Best Workplaces for CommutersSM team. "Employers in the region demonstrate again and again how a strong commitment combined with a little creativity can have a tremendous impact on reducing traffic congestion, improving air quality, and making the ride to work less stressful for the average commuter."

By joining the list, you'll earn the recognition you deserve. You'll also join more than 5,000 employers across the country that are distinguishing themselves from the competition as the nation's Best Workplaces for CommutersSM.

"We take pride in being one of the region's Best Workplaces for Commuters," said Michele Wagner, Human Resources Consultant at CH2M HILL. "With nearly one million commuters traveling our congested roadways each day, we're committed to finding ways to help our employees deal with the challenges associated with commuting and to reducing air pollution and traffic gridlock in the area. We encourage other organizations to do their part and join this growing program."

Other participating CHRA members include JD Edwards & Company, Johns Manville, and Encoda Systems. There has never been a better time to promote commuter benefits. Even with the current economy, offering commuter benefits can be a cost-effective way to reduce payroll taxes, minimize the time and expense needed to train new workers, and promote your organization as a workplace that cares about its employees—not just while they are at work, but while they're on the way to work, as well.

Getting on the list is easy! To join, simply enroll in the Best Workplaces for CommutersSM program via an on-line enrollment form at www.bwc.gov/doiqualify. When you join, you'll verify that you meet the criteria. You'll also help challenge other employers to follow your lead. For more information on the program, visit www.bwc.gov/denver, e-mail bwc@epa.gov, or call 888-856-3131.
